Alex Brandreth joined Luna in March 2020 and is responsible for co-ordinating the overall investment strategy at Luna from asset allocation to security selection.

Market Commentary

UK political developments continue to take centre stage. We now have a new Prime Minister, another new Chancellor and with it almost a complete reversal of the "mini-budget" announced at the end of September. The government U-turn has been welcomed by markets with sterling recovering from its lows, UK government bond (Gilts) prices picking up and global stock markets having a strong month. The Dow Jones Industrial Average surged 14% in October, its best month since January 1976. The Nasdaq Composite, which is more heavily weighted in technology and growth stocks, added less than 4% during the month. The S&P 500 split it down the middle, adding 8% in October. These returns are in US dollar terms and the recovery in the pound would have detracted for a UK investor. Closer to home, the FTSE 100 delivered a total return of 2.99%.

It was a mixed month from an economic data perspective in the UK; unemployment fell to the lowest level for 50 years, however, gross domestic product (GDP) is estimated to have fallen by 0.3% in August 2022. As well as this, a number of surveys produced monthly to gauge the current strength of the manufacturing and service sectors moved into contraction territory. This weaker data is increasing the probability that the economy has gone into recession already.

The final two months of the year will be dominated by the same headlines that we have seen already in 2022. Now that the Chinese National Congress has finished, will the party look to change their Covid approach? Inflation in developed nations has probably now peaked, but how quickly does it fall back to more "normal" levels? Central banks will continue to move interest rates higher when they meet in November and December but when will they blink in the wake of a weakening economic backdrop? To top it off we also have US midterm elections to look forward to in November. From a seasonal and US election cycle perspective we are moving into traditionally a stronger period for stock markets.
