Market Commentary

June was a month dominated by political noise, UK inflation continuing to fall and Artificial Intelligence companies continue to be the big beneficiaries of this evolution. The prospects of interest rates being cut remains very much alive. Equity markets were mixed during the month.

We had good news on the inflation front with the UK Consumer Price Index (CPI) falling to 2%, in line with the Bank of England target for the first time in nearly three years. Across the pond, US inflation is proving to be slightly stickier, and the Federal Reserve have said that they expect only one interest rate cut in 2024. The European Central Bank did decide to cut interest rates by 0.25%. Closer to home, the announcement of the early UK election scuppered hopes of the Bank of England cutting rates in June but it is looking likely that they will reduce interest rates by 0.25% at the meeting in August. Against this backdrop UK government and corporate bonds delivered gains during the month.

As mentioned above, it was quite a surprise to most (maybe not all betting politicians!) that the next UK election is going to be held on US Independence Day, the 4th July. At the time of writing, the result is unknown, however we do not expect this event to cause major volatility in the UK sterling, gilt or equity markets with both major political parties being relatively centrist and with little wriggle room.

Nvidia surpassed Microsoft in the month to become the largest public company in the world. This was the key driver to markets in the month with Technology and the US market buoyed by the acceleration of Artificial Intelligence. The Nasdaq 100 was up over 7% during the month.

French President Emmanuel Macron was feeling bruised after the European Parliamentary elections and called a snap election. This news sent French assets (bonds and equities) tumbling in the month. This meant that the UK's main stock market retook its crown as Europe's most valuable for the first time in nearly two years, data shows.
