Market Commentary

We knew coming into 2025 that it was likely to be a rollercoaster and so far it hasn't disappointed; we have certainly started the year in that fashion. As Donald Trump took office we saw a raft of executive orders spanning multiple areas. But perhaps the main driver for markets was as the month came to an end and they were rocked by the announcement that the US would implement tariffs against Canada, Mexico and an additional 10% on China. This has raised concerns over global supply chains, retaliation and inflation. This was all after a very public spat between the US and Colombia that threatened the use of tariffs over tensions arising from the deportation of migrants.

Away from politics, markets also were digesting the emergence of DeepSeek, the Chinese competitor to ChatGPT. What grabbed the headlines was the fact that DeepSeek was able to operate much more cheaply and use lower energy costs, which led to concerns around US technology stocks. As the month came to a close those fears receded and share prices bounced back after reporting strong earnings in the quarter. It is still early days to understand how this development is going to unravel but one positive to take from this is that it means Artificial Intelligence costs are likely to come down and the energy demand will be lower. This is a positive for both companies and governments.

Away from the volatility in US technology, most major equity markets were positive during January with Europe and the UK leading the way. The lack of Technology exposure and cheaper valuations saw fresh all-time highs on the Dax and FTSE 100.

Bonds also had a stronger month and posted gains. Consumer Price Index in the UK dipped from 2.6% to 2.5% during the month, whilst economic growth was weaker than expected. This means that an interest rate cut by the Bank of England in early February looks more certain.
