Market Commentary

President Donald Trump has certainly arrived with a bang. Liberation Day came on the 2nd April, when the President outlined his plans on rebalancing global trade. This has added uncertainty to global supply changes, cast a shadow over globalisation, and dented the confidence of US consumers and businesses. The risk to the US of stagflation, a period of higher inflation and lower growth, has increased. Whether or not that tips the world's largest economy into a recession is unknown but the risks are higher. The news subsequently led to a 'run' on US assets, with equity markets lower, bond yields higher and a weakening of the US dollar.

The US government bond market reaction may be one of a surprise. During periods of uncertainty investors would expect safe-haven assets to provide protection but such was the negative outlook from the developments the bond market wasn't immune from the selling pressure. In fact, it was the moves in the bond markets, that many investors believe, led to the 90 day pause on tariffs on all countries except China, with a 10% rate being applied a week later on the 9th April.

The pause was welcome and it allows businesses to plan supply chains and limit shortages of goods being imported by the US. Markets therefore rallied on the news and ended the month pretty much where they started. The US markets though were still lower to a sterling investor due to the weakening of the US dollar. However, the outlook remains uncertain given that businesses will still not know which countries and what level tariffs are being applied at.

It is difficult to predict the next steps. We are dealing with significant government policy that is changing. The longer this goes on, the greater the chance of a US recession. The sooner that trade deals are agreed then the better for all parties. April does highlight why taking a longer term approach to investing is appropriate. We have short term volatility in both directions at the moment but it is important to note that markets do tend to deliver stronger returns over the long term. Making knee jerk reactions to constant change, such as selling at the bottom, could have made for bad investment decisions in April.

It is difficult to predict the next steps. We are dealing with significant government policy that is changing. The longer this goes on, the greater the chance of a US recession. The sooner that trade deals are agreed then the better for all parties. April does highlight why taking a longer term approach to investing is appropriate. We have short term volatility in both directions at the moment but it is important to note that markets do tend to deliver stronger returns over the long term. Making knee jerk reactions to constant change, such as selling at the bottom, could have made for bad investment decisions in April.

Market Commentary

President Donald Trump has certainly arrived with a bang. Liberation Day came on the 2nd April, when the President outlined his plans on rebalancing global trade. This has added uncertainty to global supply changes, cast a shadow over globalisation, and dented the confidence of US consumers and businesses. The risk to the US of stagflation, a period of higher inflation and lower growth, has increased. Whether or not that tips the world's largest economy into a recession is unknown but the risks are higher. The news subsequently led to a 'run' on US assets, with equity markets lower, bond yields higher and a weakening of the US dollar.

The US government bond market reaction may be one of a surprise. During periods of uncertainty investors would expect safe-haven assets to provide protection but such was the negative outlook from the developments the bond market wasn't immune from the selling pressure. In fact, it was the moves in the bond markets, that many investors believe, led to the 90 day pause on tariffs on all countries except China, with a 10% rate being applied a week later on the 9th April.

The pause was welcome and it allows businesses to plan supply chains and limit shortages of goods being imported by the US. Markets therefore rallied on the news and ended the month pretty much where they started. The US markets though were still lower to a sterling investor due to the weakening of the US dollar. However, the outlook remains uncertain given that businesses will still not know which countries and what level tariffs are being applied at.

It is difficult to predict the next steps. We are dealing with significant government policy that is changing. The longer this goes on, the greater the chance of a US recession. The sooner that trade deals are agreed then the better for all parties. April does highlight why taking a longer term approach to investing is appropriate. During periods of uncertainty investors would expect safe-haven assets to provide protection but such was the negative outlook from the developments the bond market wasn't immune from the selling pressure. In fact, it was the moves in the bond markets, that many investors believe, led to the 90 day pause on tariffs on all countries except China, with a 10% rate being applied a week later on the 9th April.

The pause was welcome and it allows businesses to plan supply chains and limit shortages of goods being imported by the US. Markets therefore rallied on the news and ended the month pretty much where they started. The US markets though were still lower to a sterling investor due to the weakening of the US dollar. However, the outlook remains uncertain given that businesses will still not know which countries and what level tariffs are being applied at.

It is difficult to predict the next steps. We are dealing with significant government policy that is changing. The longer this goes on, the greater the chance of a US recession. The sooner that trade deals are agreed then the better for all parties. April does highlight why taking a longer term approach to investing is appropriate. We have short term volatility in both directions at the moment but it is important to note that markets do tend to deliver stronger returns over the long term. Making knee jerk reactions to constant change, such as selling at the bottom, could have made for bad investment decisions in April.

Market Commentary

President Donald Trump has certainly arrived with a bang. Liberation Day came on the 2nd April, when the President outlined his plans on rebalancing global trade. This has added uncertainty to global supply changes, cast a shadow over globalisation, and dented the confidence of US consumers and businesses. The risk to the US of stagflation, a period of higher inflation and lower growth, has increased. Whether or not that tips the world's largest economy into a recession is unknown but the risks are higher. The news subsequently led to a 'run' on US assets, with equity markets lower, bond yields higher and a weakening of the US dollar.

The US government bond market reaction may be one of a surprise. During periods of uncertainty investors would expect safe-haven assets to provide protection but such was the negative outlook from the developments the bond market wasn't immune from the selling pressure. In fact, it was the moves in the bond markets, that many investors believe, led to the 90 day pause on tariffs on all countries except China, with a 10% rate being applied a week later on the 9th April.
